There isn't numerical power levels in DxD. However, that gives you the creative liberty for your fan fiction. You can create any numerical system to represent someone's power level. However, there shouldn't be a 1 point difference if you're jumping power brackets. FYI: ...

Depending on the system used, users can, when possible, create a new original class or a new version of an existing class that has the abilities of the old one with certain improvements. Character classes are separate from Physiology, though a character's physiology will often impact the set of character classes available to them.

1. In comparison to Boosts, the class system has been very inconsistent throughout the series despite having equal importance. 2. Narratively, the class system would lead you to believe that X character is stronger or weaker than Y, when via onscreen feats (And the Boost ability), Y is stronger than X. 3. There are examples (above) of this inconsistent method of ...

Vol ranges are based on light novel. Tier 10: 0 (Regular humans, animals, and other creatures with absolutely no magical power.) Tier 9: 1-99 (Anyone from the weakest magic user (including but not limited to Issei when he was initially revived) to just below the average low-class devil.

The Angels ( Tenshi) are one of the Three Factions in High School DxD, alongside the Devils and Fallen Angels. There are two major types of Angels in the story: the Pure Angels (?, Junsuina Tenshi), and Reincarnated Angels (, Tensei Tenshi). Originating from Heaven, the Angels are...

Issei Hyoudou is the primary protagonist of the series High School DxD. An extremely lecherous individual, he is known as one of the most perverted individuals in Kuoh Academy alongside his best buddies, Matsuda and Motohama. He was asked out on a date by the Fallen Angel Raynare, who disguised herself as a normal human, only to be mercilessly killed at the climax of their ...

Transcended beings - beings whose power is on par with god class beings without being ones... (even if they would gain divinity they would still be considered transcended beings rather than god class beings)

The following is the list of Devil clans under the 72 Pillars. The full list of clans under the 72 Pillars and the list of those that became extinct was first mentioned in the Extra Life of Volume 8. The number of families that still exist is 32 while the remaining 40 families are said to be extinct, but a few of the devils of these families/bloodlines are still alive, such as the 4 members of ...

I think the ranking system already in place for DxD is just fine. F - Average Humans E - Low-Mid-class Devils / Lesser Winged / Y?kai D - High-class Devils / Cherubs / Y?kai C - Ultimate ...

That's why I had to adjust and make Madara's power comparable to the Super Devil like Sirzechs in High

The closest thing for measurements is when they mention when a power compares to a certain ranking of the devil class ranking system. Unfortunately there's no numbers system. x.

The Four Great Satans (, Yondai Ma?) were the original rulers of the Underworld and leaders of the Devils. They were named Lucifer, Beelzebub, Leviathan, and Asmodeus. At some point in the past, the four original Devil Kings desiring world domination led the Devils against God and the Angels in Heaven as well as Azazel and the Fallen Angels in the Great War, the latter ...

Humans (, Ningen) are not deeply concentrated on in High School DxD, but they do play an important role in the Devils' ranking system as reincarnates. Largely residing in the human world, Humans are the most common species with the largest population in the series. After the Great War had exhausted all Three Factions, the Angels, Fallen Angels, and Devils all had to rely on ...
